

TROUTMAN SANDERS

New Office Raleigh, NC

---

Size

15,000 square feet

Project Highlights

Boardroom with operable glass walls opens to receptions and pantry for events

Natural palette and organic inspiration that complement the wooded surroundings

Glass-walled, universally-sized attorney offices with workstations in an open office area

IA developed workplace standards for the firm's national offices going forward

Services Provided

Strategy; Full service interior architecture and design; Experiential graphic design; Sustainability and wellness; Lighting design; Design intelligence

---

For its new Raleigh office, law firm Troutman Sanders selected the top floor of a modern office tower in a vibrant, wooded suburban development. In addition to supporting the firm's workstyle, the new work environment is welcoming and inviting, with a generous reception area and an adjacent, flexible boardroom that can expand to the reception and pantry areas.

Throughout the space, a natural palette is calming, thoughtfully detailed, and complementary to the outdoor surroundings. A custom wall feature in the reception area displays solid white oak strips arranged to create an organic pattern of abstract trees. Glass-walled, universally-sized attorney offices with height adjustable desks reflect the open and transparent design. Adjacent to workstations in the open office area, the library is housed in low bookshelves. Conference rooms in the office area perform double duty for collaboration and meetings.

Simultaneously with the firm's headquarters design in Atlanta, the IA team worked with Troutman Sanders to develop workplace standards for the firm's national offices. The new standards, applied to the Raleigh office design, improve efficiency, increase employee satisfaction, and create memorable client experiences.