

WAGGENER EDSTROM

Seattle, WA

Size

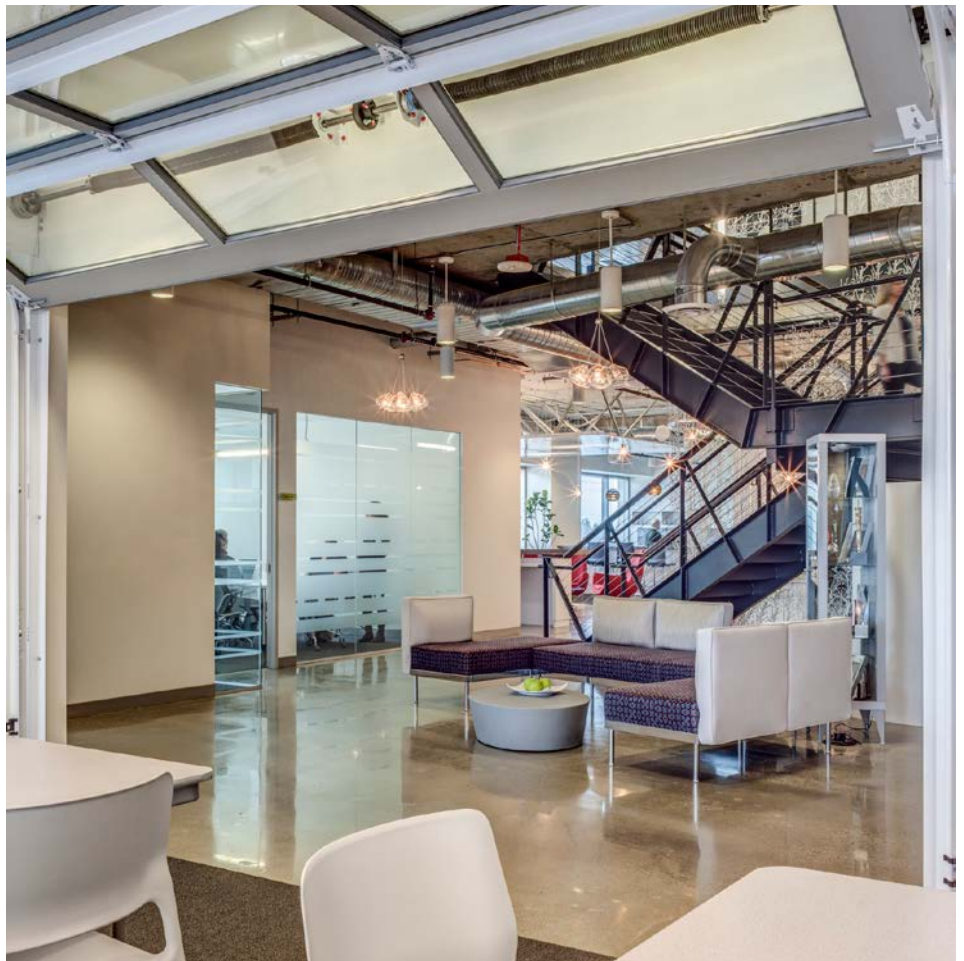

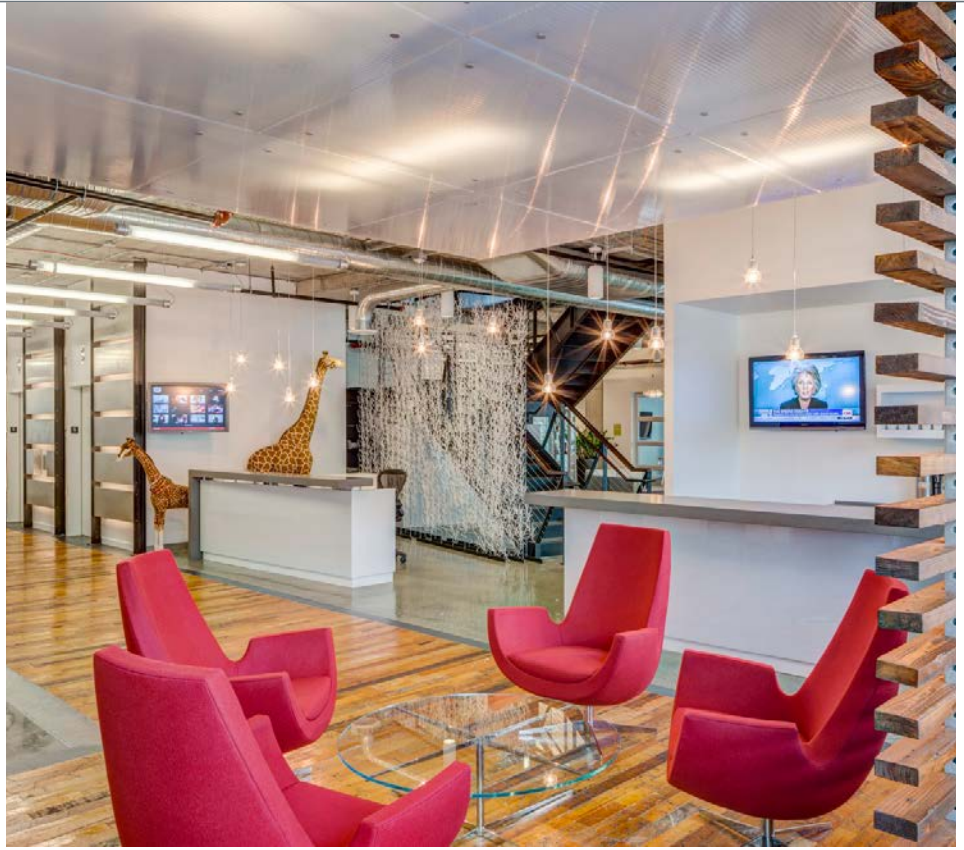

43,000 square feet

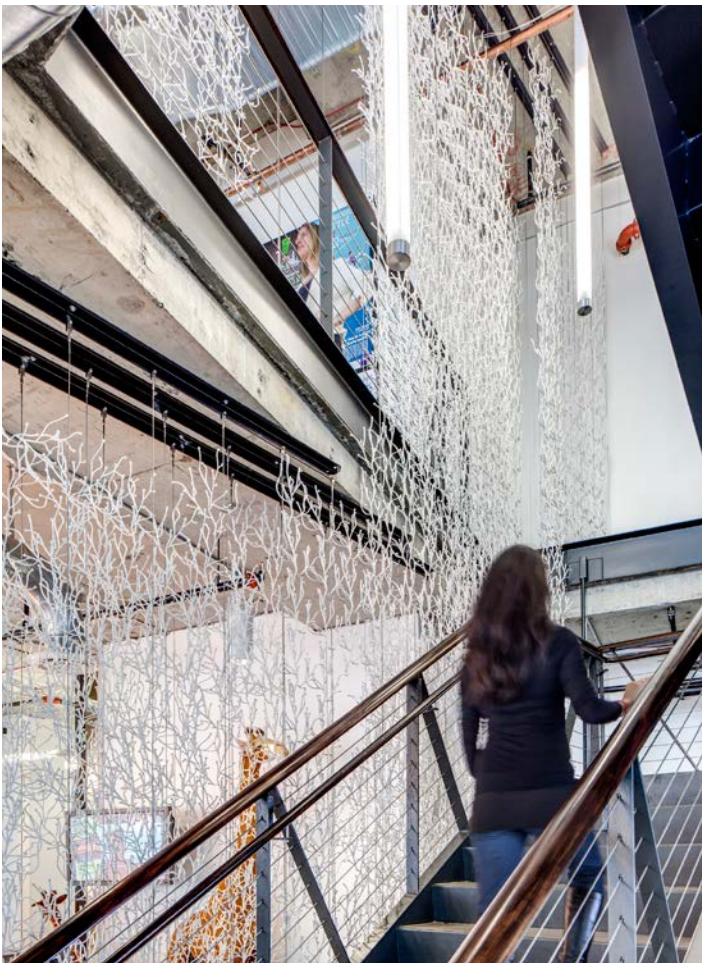

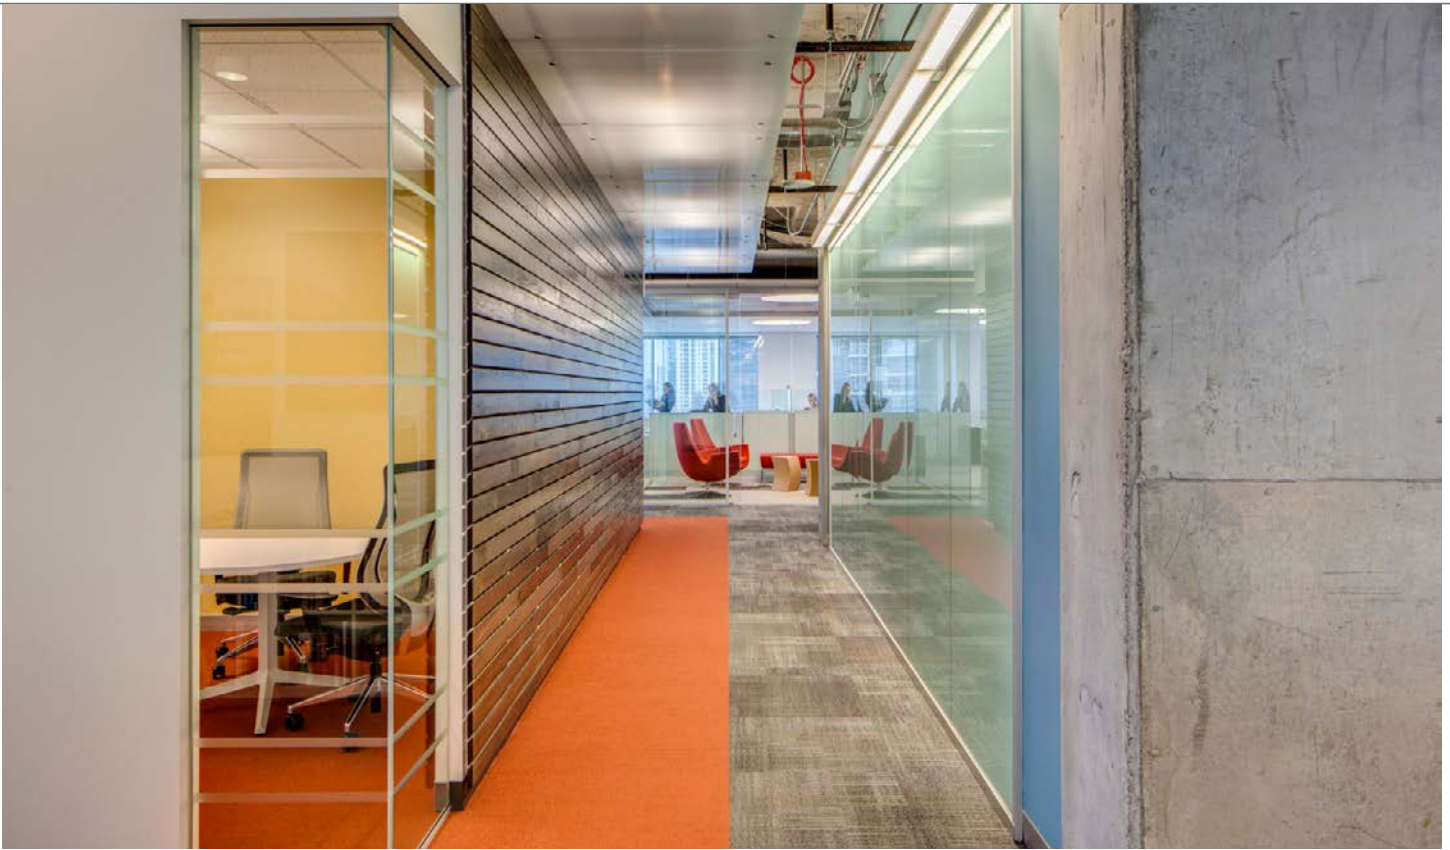

Project Highlights

Demountable walls for long-term flexibility
Modified benching system integrates loose furniture to allow for re-configuration and collaboration; Minimalist design palette - makes Waggener Edstrom's own work 'pop' within the space and allows for customization over time to reflect its evolving culture; Recycled materials, including reclaimed wall paneling and flooring, steel lobby panels, and carpet tiles made from recycled content; Reception blends seamlessly with break area to engage visitors; Circulation spaces include collaborative zones; Interconnecting stair; High visual transparency

Services Provided

Full service interior design and architecture;
Environmental graphic design

Waggener Edstrom Worldwide is an international public relations and marketing company with major clients that include Microsoft.

Occupying two floors in downtown Bellevue, WA, their existing ten-year-old space was dark, heavily-colored and maze-like, blocked natural daylight and views, and impeded the employee's ability to communicate and collaborate.

Our reconstruction of the space removed meaningless interior walls, opening the space to light and views. The new workstation system featured 42-inch high side panels with 14" glass extensions, allowing privacy when seated, but communication when standing, contributing to the feeling of openness and collaboration.

Complementing the open work environment, multiple conference rooms ranging in size from small to large allow for private phone calls, team meetings and formal client presentations. Chance meetings are encouraged at kitchen and break areas, copy areas, and in the main corridors, where white boards and flat screen monitors support collaborative work.

The space is deliberately clean and simple to act as a neutral canvas for the display of Waggener Edstrom's own work.