

BAKER & McKENZIE

Mexico City, Mexico

Size

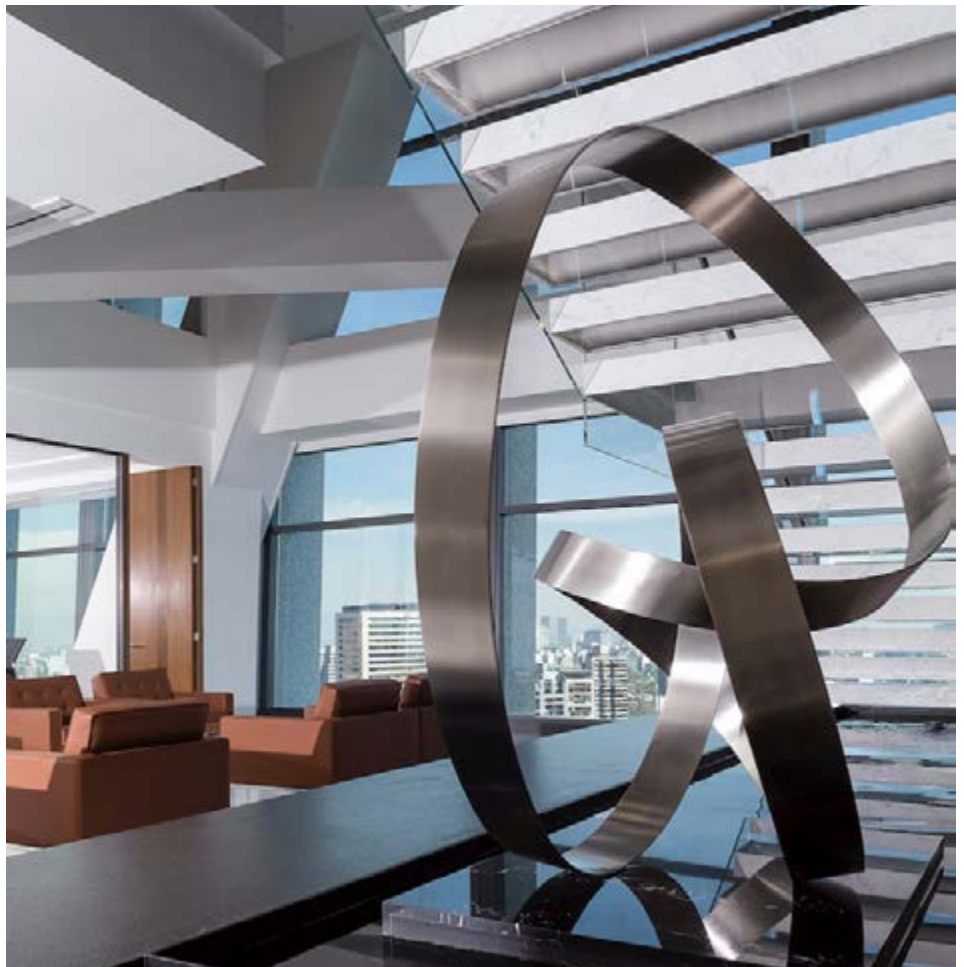

55,000 square feet

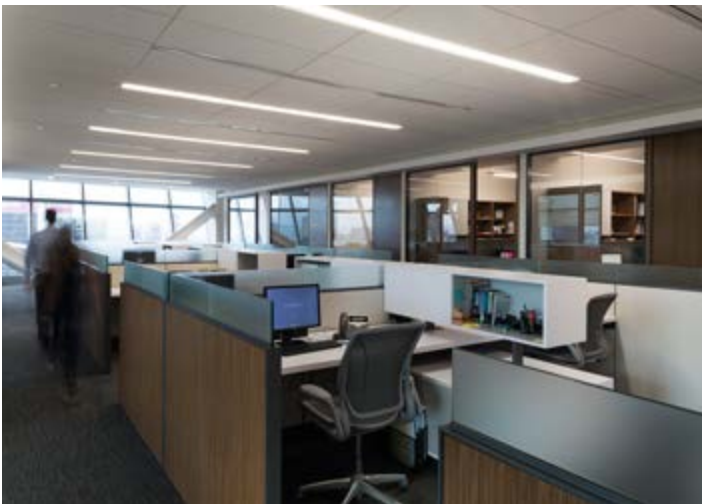

Project Highlights

Firm's first relocation in 40 years; Two-story reception with interconnecting stair; Client-facing conference center; Modern design reflects international practice and references local style and culture; Flexible planning modules to accommodate future change

Services Provided

Full interior design and architecture

For the first time in 40 years, Baker & McKenzie, a Chicago-based global law firm, relocated its corporate office in Mexico City to a 55,000 square-foot, two-story office space. Wanting to engage an international interior architecture firm based out of the United States, they partnered with IA due to our international practice, expertise in the legal services market, and experience designing projects that implement corporate objectives into culturally-sensitive design solutions.

The design team developed a modern design that reflects the international nature of the firm while referencing the local style and culture. The space includes an impressive two-story reception and client-facing conference center. The design, based on flexible planning modules, allows the space to accommodate change over time.