Okta's new headquarters in the heart of San Francisco's thriving East Cut District is designed as a destination amid notable tech-focused neighbors, including Google, Microsoft, and the new Salesforce Tower and Transit Center. Founded in 2009 and driven by exponential growth, the new headquarters for this global identity provider brings staff together, and represents the maturation of Okta's culture as a connected, transparent community focused on customer success, innovation, and employee empowerment.

An angled line of LED light embedded in the wall and starting at the elevator lobby runs throughout the entire 10-story, 190,000-square-foot campus acting as a wayfinding tool, and celebrating Okta's "Always On" motto.

Design gestures, repeated throughout the vertical campus, evolve and change so that each floor (no two floorplates are the same) offers a unique experience. Undulating pendant lights, dynamic floorplans, and a gradient of accent colors shift to make each floor memorable.

Okta's welcoming new venue emphasizes amenity and collaboration spaces to build relationships across teams and to inspire creativity, supported by a significant investment in technology.
